

Turning one chicken into a successful poultry business for people like Francis

Francis, from Uganda, is very elderly and has never been able to find permanent work. Every year his large family feared that the harvest would fail and they would have no food. Then Francis got sick and ended up bedridden.

In their time of need Francis and Annet received training from Mothers' Union that has helped them prosper. Thanks to the training they saw the opportunity to use just one chicken to start a poultry business.

Since breeding the chickens they have been able to buy pigs, providing them with plenty of meat and eggs to eat. They even have enough to sell so they can afford to send their grandchildren to school, giving them an opportunity for a better future.
